

Silver Trail

The historic Silver Trail offers a quiet pace with placid lakes, rivers and streams dotting the landscape, along with relics from the Yukon's silver mining heritage. The route passes through moose habitat and offers scenic views of the Stewart River. A major tributary of the Yukon River, the Stewart lured prospectors to the area in the 1880's, which led to major mineral discoveries. Hiking and biking trails abound on the Silver Trail, often passing by old cabins and great fishing holes. Also worth exploring is Keno, where the northern mining experience is still fresh.

Driving Route

From Whitehorse to Stewart Crossing, then east on the Silver Trail to the historic frontier mining towns of Mayo and Keno. Continue on to Dawson City or return to Whitehorse.

LARGER THAN LIFE

Silver Trail Mining History

Though it never achieved Klondike-style fame, the Silver Trail has an equally long and colourful mining history. Starting in the 1880's, prospectors worked the Stewart River and endured hardships in remote creeks searching for gold and silver.

The town of Mayo was established in the early 1900's as a river settlement and supply centre for the Duncan Creek gold miners. By the 1920's, rich silver strikes on Keno Hill turned Keno into the centre of a booming mining district.

Sternwheelers transported bags of ore down the Stewart River until a road was completed in 1950. Between 1945 and 1989, the mine at nearby Elsa produced 150 million ounces of silver, 490 million pounds of lead, and 370 million pounds of zinc, and was a top silver producer in Canada.

Today, networks of marked trails surround Mayo and Keno Hill and the region is dotted with artifacts, aging buildings and old mining trails. Many of these "abandoned" mines are still privately owned and for safety should not be entered.
